Forum:	Human Rights Council (HRC)
Issue:	Eradicating human trafficking networks through international cooperation
Author:	Christina Papageorgiou
Position:	Deputy President

Personal Introduction

Greetings to all delegates!

First and foremost, congratulations on joining this year's conference! Taking this step is a fantastic way to dive into global diplomacy. My name is Christina Papageorgiou and I am deeply honoured to serve as your Deputy President for this year's MoMUN Human Rights Council! My Model United Nations journey began around four years ago, when I was just a delegate discovering new committees and positions. MUN has truly helped me with my research skills, public speaking and social skills. Discovering different cultures and their backgrounds widens your perspective on the real world.

I am very excited for this year's conference since I have long been passionate about human rights and international law, so finally being able to utilise my passion is a personal achievement of mine. I hope that throughout the conference we can manage to pass resolutions which effectively dismantle cross-border trafficking networks.

While this Study Guide will equip you with the basic skills and information to handle the topic effectively, I strongly encourage you to undertake further research as well to truly master your positions. Please feel free to contact me at papageorge.christina@gmail.com if you have any questions regarding the topic itself, the committee procedure, or if you need anything else at all!

Introduction

Human trafficking operates as one of the most pervasive and destructive illicit economies of the modern world. Trafficking relies heavily on sophisticated syndicates that routinely treat international borders as only technicalities, though it is important to note that, unlike migrant smuggling, which always involves illegal border crossing and is a crime against state sovereignty, human trafficking does not actually require crossing any international borders and can occur entirely domestically. Operating with calculated moves, these criminal networks exploit vulnerable populations, driven by poverty, conflict, heavy discrimination, displacement, and fear of blackmail, for forced labour, sexual exploitation, domestic servitude, forced criminality and organ removal. Victims may be lured, deceived or forcibly abducted, whether within their own countries or across borders, and then exploited, where they are isolated, stripped of their documents and devices and cut off from any and all support systems. Because of the skills that said syndicates have developed, isolated domestic responses are fundamentally insufficient to disrupt, let alone dismantle, their operations.

To actually stop human trafficking, countries around the world must work closely together. This means sharing information in real time so police forces across borders can track how these criminal groups operate. It also means making sure that laws are similar everywhere so traffickers cannot escape punishment by simply crossing a border into a different country with weaker rules. Another major step is cutting off their money by tracing their financial proceeds and freezing assets where legally authorised.

At the centre of this teamwork must be a strong focus on protecting trafficked victims. Instead of only focusing on catching the perpetrators, countries also need to work closely together to keep the survivors safe, as they are at high risk of getting exploited again. They are in need of medical care, emotional help, and dedicated support in order for them to rebuild their lives. Such could be done with concrete mechanisms for preventing re-trafficking, such as safe repatriation, legal assistance, rehabilitation and cross-border victim referral systems.

The roots of modern human trafficking trace back through centuries of forced labour, colonial exploitation, and early international conventions, such as the 1904 International Agreement and the 1910 International Convention for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic, which represented some of the earliest collaborative cross-border efforts to combat the trade of vulnerable persons. Today, major root causes continue to affect these networks, including systemic global poverty, violent conflict, political instability, economic displacement, and deep-seated gender or minority discrimination that leaves marginalised populations desperate and exposed to false promises of employment.

By standing united, the global community can go to great lengths to finally tear down these vicious criminal networks and protect human dignity and rights everywhere. For further information, delegates can visit the official MoMUN Conference Website.

Key Terms and Definitions

Human Trafficking

"Human trafficking involves the use of force, fraud, or coercion to obtain some type of labor or commercial sex act. Every year, millions of men, women, and children are trafficked worldwide – including right here in the United States. It can happen in any community and victims can be any age, race, gender, or nationality." [1]

[1] DHSgov on what is International Trafficking.
https://www.dhs.gov/blue-campaign/what-human-trafficking

Transnational Organized Crime

"Transnational organized crime refers to those self-perpetuating associations of individuals who operate transnationally for the purpose of obtaining power, influence, monetary and/or commercial gains, wholly or in part by illegal means, while protecting their activities through a pattern of corruption and/ or violence, or while protecting their illegal activities through a transnational organizational structure and the exploitation of transnational commerce or communication mechanisms."[2]

Extradition

"The formal process whereby a State requests from the requested State the return of a person accused or convicted of a crime to stand trial or serve a sentence in the requesting State."[3]

Non-Punishment Principle

"A human rights standard establishing that trafficked persons should not be detained, charged, or prosecuted for unlawful acts they were compelled to commit as a direct consequence of being trafficked."[4]

Human Smuggling

"The procurement, in order to obtain a financial or material benefit, of the illegal entry of a person into a State of which they are not a national or permanent resident, generally involving agreement to the journey but not necessarily ending exploitation or abuse upon arrival."[5]

Safe Houses

"Safe houses are secure, confidential residential facilities that provide immediate emergency shelter, physical protection, and essential support services to human trafficking survivors, protecting them from traffickers while aiding their recovery."[6]

---

[2] White House, "Strategy to Combat Transnational Organized Crime: Definition," Executive Office of the President, https://obamawhitehouse.archives.gov/administration/eop/nsc/transnational-crime/definition.

[3] UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), "Education for Justice: Extradition," Module 11 Key Issues, https://www.unodc.org/e4j/zh/organized-crime/module-11/key-issues/extradition.html.

[4] Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), Recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking, E/2002/68/Add.1 (New York: United Nations, 2002), Guideline 7. OHCHR Guidelines.

[5] United Nations General Assembly, Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, Supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, A/RES/55/25 (15 November 2000), Art. 3(a). UNODC Smuggling Protocol.

[6] UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), "The Role of Safe Houses in Protecting and Rehabilitating Trafficking Survivors," Expert Guidance on Victim Support, https://www.unodc.org.

Background Information

The Evolution of Modern Enslavement

Human trafficking stands as one of the most malicious violations of human rights and security in the modern day. To understand how to dismantle these illicit international networks, one must first trace their evolution from localized exploitation into highly organised, transnational criminal enterprises.

Historical Roots, the Origins and Centralization of Trafficking

While ancient forms of forced labour, such as debt bondage and the subjugation of war captives in Mesopotamia, Ancient Greece, and Rome, established early frameworks in which human beings were treated as legal property rather than individuals, these historical systems were largely localised or tied to state-sanctioned conquest rather than underground networks. The structural mechanics of modern trafficking share some historical patterns with the commodification models pioneered during the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade from the 16th to the 19th centuries. This era transformed human exploitation from opportunistic captures into an institutionalised, industrial-scale global market, establishing transnational shipping logistics, cross-continental financing, and centralised markets designed to exploit enslaved people across oceans.

Following the global abolitionist movements of the 19th and 20th centuries, legal systems of slavery were abolished in many countries, while clandestine forms of exploitation persisted. A historical example of this transition is documented in the 1920s League of Nations investigations, which identified cross-border networks trafficking women and children across Europe, the Mediterranean, and the Americas. Over the course of the 20th century, these underground rings developed beyond simple smuggling to mirror modern corporate supply chains. Contemporary syndicates now utilise specialised modular networks, separating recruiters, transit fixers, corrupt border officials, and financial launderers, to evade law enforcement detection, illustrating historical continuities in exploitation without implying that all contemporary networks share a single origin.

UN Involvement and International Legal Frameworks

As trafficking networks grew increasingly transnational, individual nation-states found themselves ill-equipped to combat syndicates that operated across multiple jurisdictions. The international community responded through a gradual codification of global anti-trafficking law.

Early 20th-Century Conventions

Initial international efforts focused narrowly on specific subsets because the policymakers and diplomats drafting these early laws were heavily influenced by the racial, moral, and social prejudices of the time. Lawmakers operated under a moral panic that focused primarily on protecting the perceived virtue and purity of white women, completely ignoring the exploitation of men, people of colour, and individuals from colonized regions. Because of these deep-seated biases, early protections were vague, fragmented, and discriminatory, treating victims based on social status and race rather than recognizing human trafficking as a universal violation of human rights.

The Landmark Palermo Protocol (2000)

The defining turning point in international cooperation came with the adoption of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (the Palermo Protocol). Rather than merely serving as an adoption milestone, this framework established the first internationally agreed legal definition of human trafficking and provided a legal foundation for prevention, prosecution and protection: It encouraged prevention through public awareness campaigns, addressing root economic vulnerabilities, and discouraging the demand that fosters exploitation. Prosecution involves criminalising human trafficking within domestic legislation, dismantling cross-border syndicates, and ensuring perpetrators face appropriate legal accountability. Finally, protection involves safeguarding victims with secure housing, medical care, legal assistance, and ensuring that repatriation or support processes do not place them at further risk. [7]This framework mattered because it created a single, clear rulebook that States Parties could follow, stopping criminals from escaping justice by hiding in countries with weak laws. By requiring States Parties to focus on preventing the crime, punishing the traffickers, and protecting the victims, it turned a messy collection of separate country efforts into a stronger framework for international cooperation.

The Rise of Globalized Networks

The Dark Web and Encrypted Communications

Traffickers increasingly use end-to-end encrypted messaging applications, darknet marketplaces, and obfuscated digital payment systems (such as cryptocurrencies) to advertise victims, negotiate transactions, and launder illicit proceeds far beyond the immediate sight of traditional law enforcement.[8]

Cyber Enabled Coercion

Modern networks utilize digital platforms for online recruitment scams. This is a growing trend across Southeast Asia, Russia and globally where victims are lured via false tech or customer service employment offers, or even blackmailed (with sexual, or business intent), only to be held in compounds and forced into online scam operations.

Socio-economic vulnerabilities

Poverty and Economic Disparity: Extreme income inequality creates a desperate baseline population vulnerable to false promises of economic mobility. Situations such as homelessness increase vulnerability to traffickers.

[7] United Nations General Assembly, Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, Supplementing the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime, A/RES/55/25 (15 November 2000). UN General Assembly A/RES/55/25.

[8] United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), Global Report on Trafficking in Persons (Vienna: United Nations, 2022). UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons.

Migration Crises and Displacement

War, civil conflict, and climate-induced displacement force millions into perilous migration routes. With legal pathways severely restricted, desperate individuals turn to smugglers, potentially encountering predatory trafficking networks that exploit their lack of legal status and protection.

Institutional Instability

Weak governance, continuous corruption, and failed state institutions create safe havens where criminal cartels can operate with near-total impunity, often colluding with local officials to shield their operations from international scrutiny.

Impact on the International Community

Erosion of the Rule of Law

Trafficking networks rely heavily on transnational corruption, bribery, and money laundering. These illicit funds undermine democratic institutions, compromise border security, and weaken financial systems.

Public Health and Human Capital Crises

The physical and psychological trauma inflicted on survivors places immense burdens on global healthcare systems, while the removal of individuals from legitimate economic participation does not help human capital development in vulnerable regions.

Strengthening Other Illicit Economies

Human trafficking rarely exists alone. The financial channels, forged documents, and smuggling corridors established by trafficking networks are sometimes used for drug trafficking, arms smuggling, and terrorist financing, presenting a connected security threat to the entire international community.

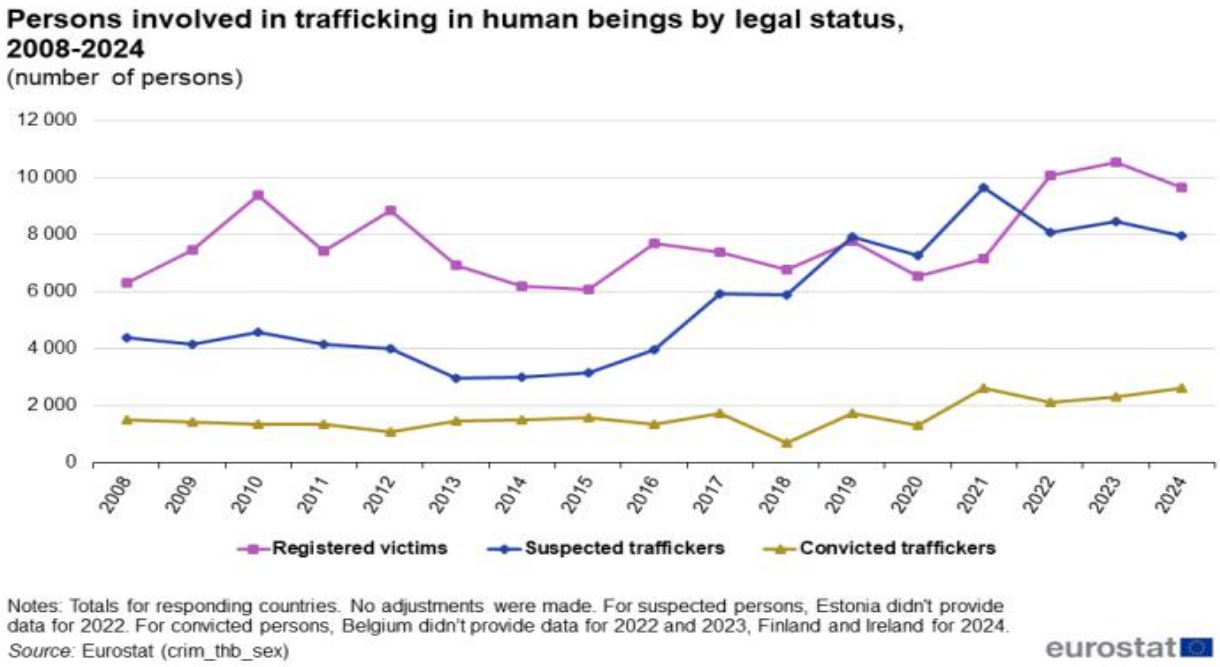

Figure 1: Persons involved in trafficking in human beings by legal status, 2008-2024

Source: Eurostat (crim_thb_sex).[9]

[9] Eurostat, "Persons involved in trafficking in human beings by legal status, 2008–2024" (Data set crim_thb_sex),EuropeanCommission, https://ec.europa.eu/eurostat/statistics-explained/index.php?title=Trafficking_in_human_beings_statistics

Figure 2: Prevalence of females in registered victims, suspected traffickers and convicted of trafficking in human beings, 2015-2024[10]

Timeline of Events

Date	Description of Event
2 December 1949	Adoption of the 1949 Convention: The United Nations General Assembly adopts Resolution 317 (IV), formally titled the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others. This consolidated older, fragmented early-20th-century white slave traffic agreements into a unified post-war global framework. Although this consolidated older agreements under a single post-war framework, its significance was severely limited by a narrow, ideological focus that conflated all sex work with trafficking while entirely ignoring non-sexual forms of forced labour and debt bondage, causing many nations to refuse ratification.[11]
7 September 1956	Expansion of Slavery and Trafficking Definitions: The United Nations holds a conference of plenipotentiaries that adopts the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, which explicitly categorizes debt bondage, serfdom, and servile marriage and similar institutions as practices analogous to slavery.[12]
15 November 2000	The adoption of the UN Protocol to prevent, suppress and punish trafficking in Persons, especially women and children,

[10] Eurostat, "Legal Status of Trafficked Persons," Statistics Explained, 2024, https://ec.europa.eu/eurostat/statistics-explained/index.php?title=File:1-legal-status-2024-v2.png.

[11] United Nations General Assembly, Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, Resolution 317 (IV) (2 December 1949). UN Human Rights Treaty Body.

[12] United Nations Economic and Social Council, Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, E/CONF.24/23 (7 September 1956). UN OHCHR Slavery Convention.

	supplementing the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. This provides the first internationally agreed definition of human trafficking.[13]
25 September 2015	Integration into the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs): The UN General Assembly adopts Resolution 70/1 (Transforming our world: the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development), explicitly embedding specific anti-trafficking targets within SDG 8 (Target 8.7), SDG 5 (Target 5.2), and SDG 16 (Target 16.2) to eradicate forced labour and modern slavery globally.[14]
3–9 June 2024	Operation Global Chain: A coordinated law-enforcement operation involving 39 countries targeted trafficking for sexual exploitation, forced criminality and forced begging. INTERPOL reported 219 arrests and the identification of 1,374 potential victims.[15]

Major Actors Involved

The Republic of France

France serves as a destination country and a key driver of international law enforcement cooperation. It has been a leader in implementing Europe-wide initiatives to combat trafficking, including through financial intelligence cooperation to track illicit profits.[16] France's active role in platforms like EMPACT (European Multidisciplinary Platform Against Criminal Threats) and its support for cross-

[13] [^1] United Nations, Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, Supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, 2000, General Assembly Resolution 55/25.

[14] United Nations General Assembly, Transforming our world: the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, A/RES/70/1 (25 September 2015).UN Sustainable Development Knowledge Platform.

[15] Europol and ASEANAPOL, Regional Intelligence Frameworks and Financial Investigations to Counter Transnational Human Trafficking, 2026, Europol Cooperation Overview.

[16]U.S. Department of State, 2024 Trafficking in Persons Report: France (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Department of State, 2024); Europol, Crackdown on human traffickers in France and Romania (The Hague: Europol Press Release, 22 March 2022); and TRACE Project, New AI technology can empower the fight against criminals and terrorists by tracking their illicit money flows (Horizon 2020 Research Initiative, 2021). Available at: U.S. State Department France TIP Report.

border projects like the ones in Africa (including anti-trafficking cooperation projects) make it a vital actor in the debate on how developed nations can assist transit states with operational intelligence.

The United Mexican States

Mexico serves as a primary source, transit, and destination country for human trafficking and is deeply connected to cartels. These cartels have diversified their illicit portfolios from drug trafficking into human smuggling and trafficking, viewing human beings as commodities, where migrants traversing Mexico from Central and South America toward the United States are routinely extorted, forced into trafficking, and subjected to severe sexual or labour exploitation. To combat this, Mexico participates in extensive bilateral security frameworks with the United States, collaborates with regional organizations and UN agencies, is part of the Palermo Protocol and works to strengthen border security, dismantle cartel financial networks through its Financial Intelligence Unit (UIF), and implement protective humanitarian measures.

The Federal Republic of Nigeria

The Federal Republic of Nigeria is a major source, transit, and destination country for human trafficking within West Africa leading into Europe and the Middle East with data from the UNODC and IOM indicating that thousands of victims, mostly women and children, are funneled through internal networks annually. Driven by regional economic instability, youth unemployment, and poor border security, Nigerian trafficking networks frequently exploit victims through forced domestic labour and sex trafficking. To combat this, Nigeria has demonstrated international cooperation by establishing the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP), which identifies and assists trafficking victims and investigates trafficking cases, partnering closely with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), and collaborating with European law enforcement agencies through transnational data and intelligence sharing in order to dismantle trafficking rings operating across the Sahel and Mediterranean areas.

The Kingdom of the Netherlands

The Kingdom of the Netherlands serves as a primary European destination and hub for human trafficking networks due to its major international ports, advanced digital infrastructure, and open borders. Because of its strategic geographic position, criminal syndicates frequently route victims through Dutch territory into Western Europe for sexual and labour exploitation. To counter this, the Netherlands is a core participant in EMPACT (European Multidisciplinary Platform Against Criminal Threats), along with France, specifically leading and collaborating on EU-wide operational action plans targeting human trafficking for labour exploitation, dismantling cyber-enabled recruitment, and targeting the financial assets of organized crime syndicates through joint operations involving Europol and national authorities.[17]

[17] Europol, EMPACT: European Multidisciplinary Platform Against Criminal Threats (The Hague: Europol, 2024); and Government of the Netherlands, National Rapporteur on Trafficking in Human Beings and Sexual Violence against Children: Annual Report (The Hague: Ministry of Justice and Security).Europol EMPACT Overview.

International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL)

INTERPOL facilitates the exchange of criminal intelligence between member countries through its secure I-24/7 network and specialised international Notices, with its Human trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants unit coordinating global operations to disrupt financial flows and criminal syndicates. Building on its past breakthroughs such as multi-agency sweeps like Operation Global Chain, which engaged dozens of countries to dismantle transnational sex trafficking and forced criminality rings, INTERPOL has expanded its scope through initiatives such as Operation CyberProtect and targeted regional activity addressing the digitalisation of organised crime. These newer operational projects specifically target emerging cyber scam compounds, online recruitment traps, and digital cryptocurrency laundering hubs across regions from Southeast Asia to West Africa and Latin America.

International Organization for Migration (IOM)

Operating globally across more than 100 countries, IOM partners with national governments, law enforcement, and local NGOs to build capacity, conduct prevention campaigns, and ensure that human rights standards, such as the non-punishment principle, are integrated into international rescue and recovery operations, while directly assisting tens of thousands of registered survivors each year through safe housing, rehabilitation facilities, psychological care and voluntary return, alongside managing the Counter-Trafficking Data Collaborative, a major repository of harmonised human trafficking case data.

UN Documents and International Agreements

Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking In Persons (2000):

The UN Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, supplementing the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, serves as the foundational global standard by establishing the internationally agreed definition of human trafficking and a three-part framework of prosecution, protection, and prevention. It obligates States Parties to criminalize trafficking in domestic law and dismantle syndicates, while requiring certain privacy and procedural protections and calling on States Parties to consider recovery assistance. The non-punishment principle is recognised in other international standards but is not expressly established by this Protocol.[18]

UN Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2010):

A strategy to implement and integrate the fight against trafficking into the UN's broader programmes in order to promote security and development focuses on tackling structural root causes like poverty and social vulnerability through public awareness and economic empowerment, keeping survivors safe through human rights-based assistance and housing, strengthening national laws to effectively bring perpetrators to justice, and fostering international cooperation between Member States and organizations.[19]

[18] United Nations General Assembly, Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, Supplementing the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime, A/RES/55/25 (15 November 2000). UN General Assembly A/RES/55/25.

The United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (2000):

The United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (UNTOC), adopted in 2000, serves as the primary international framework for fighting cross-border criminality and provides the legal foundation for the Palermo Trafficking Protocol. It establishes common measures against organised criminal groups and money laundering, streamlines mutual legal assistance, extradition, and joint operations, and mandates the tracing and confiscation of illicit assets to deprive syndicates of financial resources.

Previous Attempts to Solve the issue

Past attempts to solve the issue of human trafficking have evolved from fragmented bilateral treaties and early 20th-century white slave traffic agreements into comprehensive global frameworks like the 1949 UN Convention and the landmark 2000 Palermo Protocol, which finally established a internationally agreed legal definition.

Establishment of Universal Legal Definitions

Harmonization of National Legislation

Past international agreements and global plans of action have driven dozens of member states to act on comprehensive domestic laws, criminalizing trafficking specifically and aligning national judicial standards with international human rights standards, such as the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (Palermo Protocol, 2000) and the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings (2005).

The Border-Securitization Funding Imbalance

Historical counter trafficking financing has often favoured militarized border walls and law enforcement interdiction over victim-centred care, potentially undermining long-term recovery and survivor support. One example concerns debates over allocations between border enforcement and victim services in the United States. Victim services include trauma-informed long-term housing, comprehensive case management, mental healthcare, legal advocacy for immigration relief, and economic empowerment programmes designed for self-sufficiency. Similar concerns have been raised about the balance between EU border-control funding and civilian shelter and rehabilitation.

[19] United Nations General Assembly, United Nations Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons, A/RES/64/293 (12 August 2010). Available at: UN General Assembly A/RES/64/293.

Extradition Breakdowns in Weak Rule of Law Regions

Bilateral extradition protocols frequently face obstacles when targeting transnational networks operating in fragile states, as institutional corruption and political interference stall or outright block international warrants, including in states where corruption, weakened courts or political interference can hinder the execution of foreign warrants.

Possible Solutions

- Harmonization of Legislation: Encouraging states to align their legal definitions of human trafficking to close all loopholes that allow criminals to flee to safe havens. States adopt uniform legal standards, such as aligning with the Palermo Protocol or regional directives like the EU Trafficking Directive, to ensure consistent definitions of human trafficking across borders. Highly effective at closing judicial loopholes that syndicates exploit. Coordination for universal state compliance could be achieved through international multilateral, unbiased bodies and review mechanisms, such as the UNTOC Review Mechanism managed by the UNODC, which use self-assessment questionnaires, peer review and technical assistance; external assessments, such as the US Trafficking in Persons Report, may also encourage legal convergence.
- Financial Intelligence Units: Strengthening the ability of international banks to flag and freeze assets linked to human trafficking and their financial intermediaries. National and international banking systems can require suspicious transaction reporting, allowing specialized units to track, intercept, and freeze illicit cash flows and assets linked to traffickers. Such is potentially effective in dismantling the business model of trafficking by cutting off their liquidity. A suggestion would be credit-card tracking for illicit activity with such mechanisms. Seeing as there is suspicious activity while purchasing goods, or the goods themselves being suspicious, especially from online dark-markets, intelligence units could detect such activity and report it to local authorities for routine checks or organisations themselves for further investigation.
- Technology and Data Sharing: Balancing the need for rapid intelligence sharing with the protection of human rights and privacy. Law enforcement agencies integrate secure intelligence networks (such as Europol or the Egmont Group) to rapidly exchange cross-border digital evidence and data. This is crucial for tracking illicit technology-dependent modern trafficking rings in real time.

Further reading (optional)

- UNODC Human Trafficking Overview
- UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons
- Europol Trafficking in Human Beings & EMPACT Priorities
- Eurojust EMPACT Overview
- UNODC Introduction on Trafficking

- Homeland Security Blue Campaign
- Polaris Modern Slavery

References and Bibliography

American Psychological Association Task Force on Trafficking of Women and Girls. (2014). Report of the task force on trafficking of women and girls. American Psychological Association. https://www.apa.org/pi/women/programs/trafficking/report

Council of Europe. (2005). Council of Europe convention on action against trafficking in human beings (CETS No. 197). Council of Europe. https://www.coe.int/en/web/conventions/full-list/-/conventions/treaty/197

Danailova-Trainor, G., & Laczko, F. (2010). Trafficking in persons, migration and conflict: Exploring the linkages. International Migration, 48(4), 67–87. https://doi.org/10.1111/j.1468-2435.2010.00624.x

Eurojust. (n.d.). EMPACT: European multidisciplinary platform against criminal threats. Retrieved August 1, 2026, from https://www.eurojust.europa.eu/empact

European Union Agency for Law Enforcement Cooperation (Europol). (n.d.). Trafficking in human beings. Retrieved August 1, 2026, from https://www.europol.europa.eu/crime-areas/trafficking-in-human-beings

Farrell, A., & Bright, K. (2016). Human trafficking. In W. G. Jennings (Ed.), The handbook of measurement issues in criminology and criminal justice (pp. 115–138). John Wiley & Sons. https://doi.org/10.1002/9781118868799.ch6

Gozdziak, E. M., & Bump, M. N. (2008). Data and research on human trafficking: Bibliography of research-based literature. Georgetown University Institute for the Study of International Migration.

International Organization for Migration (IOM). (2019). Data and research on human trafficking: A global review. IOM. https://publications.iom.int/books/data-and-research-human-trafficking-global-review

Laczko, F., & Gozdziak, E. (Eds.). (2005). Data and research on human trafficking: A global survey. International Organization for Migration.

United Nations General Assembly. (2000). Protocol to prevent, suppress and punish trafficking in persons, especially women and children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Resolution 55/25). United Nations. https://www.unodc.org/documents/treaties/Special/2000_Protocol_to_Prevent_2C_Suppress_and_Punish_Trafficking_in_Pers.pdf

United Nations General Assembly. (2010). United Nations global plan of action to combat trafficking in persons (Resolution 64/293). United Nations. https://www.unodc.org/documents/human-trafficking/United_Nations_Global_Plan_of_Action_to_Combat_Trafficking_in_Persons.pdf

United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). (2020). Global report on trafficking in persons 2020. United Nations. https://www.unodc.org/documents/data-and-analysis/tip/2021/GLOTiP_2020_15jan_web.pdf

United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC). (2024). Global report on trafficking in persons 2024. United Nations. https://www.onlinelibrary.iihl.org/wp-content/uploads/2025/02/2024-%E2%80%93-UNODC-UNODC-Global-Report-on-Trafficking-in-Persons.pdf

U.S. Department of State. (2025). Trafficking in persons report 2025. U.S. Department of State. [suspicious link removed]

Walk Free. (2023). The global slavery index 2023. Walk Free. https://www.walkfree.org/global-slavery-index/